About this piece

An Arts and Crafts oak cottage sideboard or dresser designed by Ambrose Heal for Heals, combining architectural simplicity with functional craftsmanship, c.1920.

This oak sideboard or dresser was designed by Ambrose Heal for Heals during the Arts and Crafts movement (1880 – 1910), reflecting the designer's pursuit of honest construction and domestic utility. The piece embodies Heal's belief that furniture should express structural clarity through proportion and material truth.

Formed from well-figured quarter-sawn oak, the cabinet comprises two short drawers above a pair of fielded cupboard doors, each fitted with simple circular knobs and a central hasp latch. The gently curved top rail and bracket feet soften the rectilinear frame, producing a balanced silhouette typical of Heal's early twentieth-century cottage furniture.

Made circa 1920, it belongs to Heal's later interpretation of the movement, aligning with the firm's principle that craftsmanship could coexist with well-designed manufacture. The original surface retains a warm patina with consistent tone throughout.
