About this piece

E. W. Godwin attributed

Made by James Peddle or Smee. An oak armchair with an ergonomically perfectly shaped back, a very comfortable armchair indeed with sabre back legs and turned angled front legs all connected by a crinoline hoop stretcher.

The turned arm supports connect to the square sections which follow down through the sides of the seat meeting the top of the legs. A design Godwin also used for the back legs of his Old English and Jacobean Armchairs that were made by William Watt.
